

Senior Richemont employee jumps across to Kiki McDonough as managing director

October 3, 2017

A luxury London jeweller has welcomed a new managing director to oversee its plans for international wholesale expansion.

Céline Larose, who worked at Richemont for 15 years most recently as brand director for Vacheron, has joined Kiki McDonough as managing director with immediate effect. Brand founder, Kiki McDonough, said: “I am very much looking forward to having Céline joining the Kiki team as MD. The business is expanding and having someone steering the business forward leaves me more time for the creative role and running the store in Symons Street.”

Larose will manage the development of the brand’s ecommerce offering and will oversee an expansion of international wholesale, with plans in motion to increase a presence in both the UK and the USA.

Kiki McDonough, which is credited for revolutionising British fine jewellery design through over 30 years, continues to work towards leading the way creating wearable, timeless jewellery for women of all ages, for every occasion.
